TST APPOINTS MR. SALIM ADATIA TO SERVE AS CEO

VANCOUVER – March 05, 2008

It was announced today that Salim Adatia has been appointed as company's Chief Executive Officer of the Technical Systems Testing (TST) group of companies upon the resignation of John Cargnello.

Salim has served TST since January 2001. Prior to his current responsibilities, he was Chief Operating Officer, responsible for driving the performance of the company's four globally spread testing facilities.

Recently promoted Anna Sainsbury, Marketing & Client Support Manager, said “Salim was selected based on his strong track record leading the testing facilities, as well as his strong executive and personal qualities. On the heels of the opening of TST’s London based facility, the state of the art developments and recent growth of our Sydney facility, and doubling of size of the Vancouver facility’s personnel, TST has been in a phase of unprecedented growth. It will be exciting to see TST’s advancements in the near future.”

Adatia said, “As one of the world’s most experienced test facilities for both land-based and remote (interactive) gaming it’s an honour to continue TST’s leadership team and have the opportunity to build on its expanding success."

Adatia takes up his new duties effective immediately. He succeeds John Cargnello, founder and CEO since TST’s inception in 1993.

Noah Turner continues his long-standing tenure with TST and remains Chief Technical Officer of the TST group of companies.
